But when a decade ago, President Ngo Dinh Diem of the Republic of South Vietnam turned to the United States for economic assistance, President Eisenhower exaggerated the gravity of the situation, and he determined to give direct American aid to communists because South Vietnam is not ours. It is not any such bright prospect.

In the years immediately following the signing of the 1954 Geneva accords, the communists in North Vietnam gave first priority to building armed forces far larger than those of any other Southeast Asian country.

They did this to establish control over their own population and to ensure a secure base for subversion in South Vietnam and Laos. In
